

FOR THE FARMER.

Contentment.

Once on a time an old red hen
Went a-creeping with pompous clucks,
For fate had little babies to feed,
A part of which were tiny ducks.
"I have a duck as well as chicks—
I have a duck as well as chicks—
O children, as you can see."

A season later, this old hen
Appeared, still cackling of her luck,
For, though she boasted babies ten,
Instead of chickens, as before,
"The better," said the old red hen,
"My babies now are strong brood,
And consequently, cannot drown!"

The following spring the old red hen
Died, but just as prouder as before—
But, lo! she had a dozen ducklings too,
Instead of chickens, as before,
"The better," said the old red hen,
"My babies now are strong brood,
And consequently, cannot drown!"

But, oh, alas! how poor and lousy
Were these ducklings, and round again
The eggs overruled, and
And children was the old red hen Yielded up her brood, and
And still she wore a cheerful air,
And the best these things are, so
For babies, who care?"

I half suspect that many more,
And many, many women too,
Could learn a lesson from the hen
Who could not take care!

She ne'er presumed to take offense
At any fate that might befall,

But she contented that was all!

How to Get the Most Butter.

There are several things which give the most butter from a cow of any kind. First, the food of a cow affects it; second, the manner of setting the milk; chiefly in regard to the time which it requires for the cream to rise, and third, the temperature at which the milk is heated.

It has been shown by many careful experiments, and by the results of long practice, that succulent food helps to produce a large quantity of fat in the milk, and also has such an effect upon the same, as to cause the cream to rise more rapidly from the milk, leaving the fat to be lost to the buttermilk. Hence, the use of ensilage, or, what is better for most farmers and easier to accomplish, the feeding of roots of an objectionable kind, such as mangels or sugar beets, to the wintering cow, the use of some kind of meal, preferably a mixture of corn meal and coarse middlings, with pasture in the summer. In winter, the use of hay or fodder, molasses with boiling water, with which the meal is mixed, is better than dry hay or fodder. Further, it has been shown that the cream rises more rapidly when the milk has been mixed together, and when the milk has been set for thirty-six hours, and the cream churned at the end of twenty-four or thirty-six hours more, the largest proportion of butter was obtained. When these methods are adopted, or longer, the character of the cream differs.

It is a loss of butter in one or the other of the settings of milk or skimnings of cream. Hence it is more profitable for a dairy to consist of many cows as will supply cream enough for a churning at one milking, and to use the cream from the first setting. Lastly, the temperature of the churning is of importance, both as to the time of churning, and the quality of the butter made. An example from the records of Houghton Farm in regard to this point, will be exceedingly instructive. They say that when a great number of tests made at the writer during several years past, at Houghton Farm, when the whole milk of a cow was churned at a temperature of sixty two degrees, all the butter was obtained, or in one case only from one and one-half quarts to two and one-half quarts, and in another, forty pounds of milk remained in the buttermilk, and was procured as a second churning. As double or treble churning is manifestly impracticable in a business dairy, and is troublesome everywhere, it is very important to observe every necessary precaution in regard to the temperature of churning. In the writer's dairy, the regular winter churning temperature was kept at sixty-two degrees, while the summer temperature was fifty-five degrees. The temperature at which the cream is to be kept, the cream is kept, should be as uniform as the same. It may be thought that a few degrees in the temperature of the cream is a small matter; but great results depend upon small things in all human affairs, as well as in nature; and if a dairyman would succeed in his business, he must observe carefully all these small things.

Green Food for Fowls.

Fowls cannot be kept healthy without a good range, or a supply of green food in their yards. An excellent plan is, to have a roomy yard provided for them, and plant it with plum or dwarf pear trees. Plum trees are very little troubled by curculios, when planted in the open air, and the green crops of fruit are secured, barring accidents of weather at the blooming season. The yard is divided into two parts; one is used for a month, while the other is growing up with green crop, as turnips, carrots, peas, beans, or mustard, which is the food of the fowls. This yard is then used, and the other is plowed and immediately sown. This keeps the ground clean, provides suitable food, and avoids most effectively the troublesome disease known as gapes; the fatal cholera is also avoided by this management; the health being improved, more eggs will be laid.

Gold in an Old Boot.

Said an old-timer: "I never saw a ghost, but I once made a pretty good rain where I at first thought I had found a dead man. I was prospecting in the Andes country, California. One day I went up the creek to about a mile and seated myself on a rock to rest. Across the stream, on the opposite bank, were the remains of three or four campains. Some of these had about ten tons of the to the ground from the way of the ground on this side. I observed that part of the fire place of a near camp had tumbled down the bank toward the creek, and that the foot of an old gun boot was sticking out of the dirt. It was the only gun boot I had seen on the stones forming the earth of the old campain. I thought it was strange that any man should have laid his hearth over an old gun boot. Then it occurred to me that some man might have been murdered and buried under the hearth of the old campain, crossing the creek to the old chimney, and that the foot of the boot projected from under a large flat stone that was still in place, and had been laid there, and that it was only laid there, and buried in any kind. I kicked the old boot down the bank, and then took a pair of dirk and whoo out of the fireplace, as I had seen some instances made of such instances in health."

"I have seen such as you can see, O children, as you can see."

SHANNONVILLE.

From an occasional Correspondent.

On Saturday, Sept. 26th, the sun, Aunt Gilbert with her husband, Mr. and Mrs. the rector, carried the Sabbath school children of the Church of England and their friends to Massasauga Point to which their annual excursion was held. The day was spent very pleasantly by all who made the pleasure of attending. The Rev. Mr. French, who had the management to look after cannot be awarded too much praise for the trouble to which he went to cause and interest the children while the boat was at sea, also after reaching the point. After dinner time the afternoon was spent in footraces and boating by the children while the young gentlemen who had their sweethearts along spent their time in strolling around while old bachelors had to stand by and look on.

MELROSE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

The harvest is all done at last and now threshing is the order of the day. As a rule the amount of grain is not what might be expected from the amount of straw.

Farmers are beginning to dig their potatoes to see if they can save a few of them, as since the last heavy rains they have begun to rot. Some patches are nearly all rotting.

Mr. and Mrs. Denill, who have spent upwards of two years in America, have just returned home. People are glad to see him and also glad to see that the climate has agreed with him so well. He is looking fine though he has not grown much.

The young people of the Salem neighborhood are giving an entertainment on Friday, Oct. 2nd. People are expecting a treat as there is some fine talent in that neighborhood.

MILLTOWN.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Your correspondents being anxious for knowledge concerning this ancient and horned village, can even now, long ago, under the column date of October 1, 1850, in the Commercial Spy, find the census of Milltown. Including all the suburbs, he found it to have a population of 1,000. In the palmy days of old it is said to have been the home of over 300. The number of vacant houses attest its former greatness. There are now twenty-two unoccupied houses.

Saturday's picnic to Massasauga seems to have been a pronounced success. The day was all that could be desired, and the children were fully determined to enjoy the treat of a boat ride. One little boy interviewed on his homeward trudge, reported "I'm sure I never did have such a good time."

Marysville.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

A party of young people from Marysville met with what might have proved a serious accident when returning from a church at Richmond. They were returning home when they got down a hill the neck-yoke and one of the traces became unfastened, thus causing the conveyance to come down upon the heels of the horses, which, becoming frightened turned a corner too abruptly for the pleasure of the occupants. But through the timely aid of the teamster, the moment the horses were secured before any injury was done beyond a severe shock to the nervous system. Moral—Never trust a horse.

Mr. Culbano lost several geese a few nights ago. A flock of them had gathered together upon the track, and not perceiving the approach of a teamster, they had gone down a hill the neck-yoke and one of the traces became unfastened, thus causing the conveyance to come down upon the heels of the horses, which, becoming frightened turned a corner too abruptly for the pleasure of the occupants. But through the timely aid of the teamster, the moment the horses were secured before any injury was done beyond a severe shock to the nervous system. Moral—Never trust a horse.

READ.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The last week has been a busy one in the parishes of the Catholic Church in Northern Tyendinaga, owing to the long expected visit of His Lordship Bishop Cleary and the Confirmation on Sunday last, when 246 persons were confirmed. On Friday afternoon His Lordship arrived at the village, and with a large delegation of the members of St. Charles in carriages, who accompanied His Lordship to the church. Having arrived at the church the Bishop made many enquiries concerning the school, &c., and announced that he would remain in the mission on Saturday, Sunday and Monday. On Saturday morning the Bishop celebrated mass at half past seven and at 9:30 the examination of the candidates for confirmation took place and the 246 candidates for confirmation took place and the 246 candidates were passed and received upon him. His Lordship were the following clergy:—Monsignor Farrelly, Beville; Rev. Father Kelly, Secretary to the Bishop; Rev. Father Mackay, Marysville; Rev. Father McCarty, Brockville; and the Rev. Father Madie, pastor.

On Sunday morning mass was celebrated at 7 o'clock by Rev. Father Kelly, by the Bishop at 7:30, and the mass for confirmation was celebrated by the Rev. Father Meade at 10 o'clock, after which the Sacrament of Confirmation was administered. There was an immense congregation present from all parts of the township, the Bishop delivering a long and impressive address in his usual eloquent and forcible manner in the course of which he thanked his good people of Tyendinaga for the many good things he had done and the many improvements he had made since his last visit three years ago. Much still remained to be done, and he knew that they had only to be told what was necessary and what they could do it. On Monday at 9 o'clock there was a meeting in the present, after which His Lordship delivered a discourse on the origin and his of the Catholic Doctrines, known as the Holy Word. It was necessary for us to speak of the scholarship and theological lore of Bishop Cleary, but this alone requires more than a passing notice. It was eloquent, forcible and exhaustive, full of historical facts and illustrations, and the most beautiful illustrations. It was one of those grand efforts of a mature mind. We regret that our space forbids us giving a synopsis of it, but in fact no synopsis could be given. It will be necessary to hear it to appreciate it. His Lordship left on Monday afternoon for Kingston.

On the 24th ult. Mr. Hugh Herald was engaged in getting his steamer for Mr. John Meader, who had been in the country threshing after dinner, when about 1 o'clock while threshing a steam in the mow discovered the barley now on fire. So quickly did the flames spread that the men in the mow, in great anxiety in getting out, and the last man lost his life. In a moment the barn with its contents, consisting of hay and the crop of 250 acres were consumed. Connected with the barn were pens, a sheep pen, stable and cattle sheds. The barn was one of the largest and most laid out in a tower-like structure. Mr. Meader's loss is $2,500, covered by $1,300 insurance in the London, Liverpool and Globe, leaving a total loss of $1,200.

The marriage bells are again ringing. On the 25th ult. Mr. Patrick Brennan, son of Mr. Patrick Brennan of the 6th con., led to the altar Miss John Hayes, daughter of Mr. John Hayes, of the 5th con. The bride was attended by Miss Catherine O'Leary and Mr. James Brennan, late of Wisconsin, the best man. The bride was beautifully dressed and looked her best. The wedding was a very pleasant affair. Charles' Church and was performed by the Rev. Father Meade. We wish the young couple every happiness and trust that their voyage through life may be smooth and prosperous and that they may live to celebrate their golden wedding.

We trust that the example of our bachelors will soon follow Mr. Brennan's good example and that long breeding guests will daily fill "the decent church that tops the neighboring hill."

The regular meeting of the Township Council took place at McRae's Tuesday.

Mr. A. Hulse, of Callingham, of Campbellford, are visiting their relatives here.

Mr. Cornelius McLaughlin, of Chicago, is visiting his relatives.

Miss Barry, of Morrisburg, is on a visit to her uncle, the Rev. Father Meade.

Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin, of Belleville, have been visiting their friends in Read.

On the 27th ult. Patrick O'Hare, eldest son of the late James O'Hare, died after a short illness at the residence of his uncle, Mr. Thomas Cowan, with whom he had been living for about three years. At the early age of 21 he was a man of great promise, but was never confirmed, last Sunday, but was prevented by his illness, and by the will of an inscrutable Providence death claimed him for his own on the same day. He was a lovable and affectionate boy and was loved alike by old and young. We extend our hearty sympathy to his relatives in their sad trial.

Soldiers are to become once more the arsenal of Russia upon the Black Sea; so the last shred of the treaty which was wrung from Russia by the capture of the place has been pitched into the wind. It now looks like little matter what the new Russia does on the Black Sea, for the Black Sea, which she holds, and, of course, fortifies, Batum and Kars, the keys of Armenia. The bear's hide is thick enough already and nobody would pierce it. Every fort on the Black Sea which Russia builds or keeps up is a potential threat to the Black Sea, which she holds, and, of course, fortifies, Batum and Kars, the keys of Armenia.

A Rattlesnake in Bed.

It was in harvest time, and hard was it to get a hand to obtain; my husband was away on a long trip, and I was alone in a lonely miles east on the prairie. I was alone with my husband's mother, a very nervous old lady, and my two little children, the elder a boy of three years, and the baby a girl a year old. But we had a little time to kill, and it was a big afraid, so we got along nicely till the fourth day, or night, rather, when we had, unexpectedly and un-welcome company. We had eaten our supper, done our outside chores, and gone up to our sleeping room containing two beds, a cradle, a chair, a washstand, a small ironed table, and laid him down on Grandma's bed. I was wishing to disturb her I told Grandma we would go to bed for the night, and as it was very warm I laid down near the edge of the bed, on the outside, while the baby was sleeping on the opposite side. I was not asleep and had been some time talking, and it had grown quite dark, when I heard a most peculiar noise that seemed to come from my place bed, that was suspended directly above my head, and in a manner that I had never seen before. I was scared, I know, but I lay still, and remained quite motionless. But my brain worked with the rapidity of lightning. By the weight resting on my neck and arm I judged it did not lie in a coil. Also I divined, in some mysterious manner, that the noise was not a snake, but a rattlesnake, and remained quite motionless. But my brain worked with the rapidity of lightning. AN ENTERPRISING citizen in the east end of Deseronto has taken a lease of land and is erecting a large building with the hopes of settling the question of the water supply in that locality. His efforts are regarded with much curiosity by residents in that district. Such curiosity surely deserves success.

AS appears by a communication school advertising in the Enterprise the school is overgrown. People are indifferent.
The school board is powerless. All the schoolrooms are overgrown. People are asked to do impossibilities. An additional teacher is an immediate necessity.

THE REEVE should call a public meeting.
Children should not be allowed to grow up in ignorance.

WE learn from the Enterprise that at the fancy dress carnival recently held in the new roller rink at Coborne, a handsome gold medal was awarded as a prize to Miss Anna Kinnimery, of Deseronto, for being the best dressed lady skater present on the occasions. Our young ladies can easily hold their own and make up with the best.

THE market agitation has already been productive of good, attention having been directed to the advantages which Deseronto offers in respect to that. Never, it is said, were so many farmers to be seen on our streets as on Tuesday last. Large quantities of seed and grain were sold. The farmers are uniting in making the prosperity of Deseronto in the matter of good prices.

IN every resident in the town would devote one half hour in the week to the duty of cutting down the weeds and removing the rubbish in front of his premises, the appearance of Deseronto would be revolutionary. The weeds plot being little more than a mass of thistles and weeds, much to the detriment of neighbors' gardens. Having read this please look into your back yard and see if it is the one referred to.

PREPARATIONS for the early opening of the new market are progressing apace under the auspices of the Deseronto Cornet Band and the good efforts of Mr. Edward and Mr. John Edwards. The weigh house has been erected and a platform laid down on the south side of Edward-st. The Reeve yesterday attended to the drafting of the by-law which will regulate the government of the market. In a week or two people will be making purchases on the Deseronto market.

AT a late meeting of the members of the Deseronto Cornet Band the following resolution which speaks for itself was unanimously passed:—"Resolved that we tender our most cordial thanks to Miss Walker, Miss Smith, Miss Gough, and Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, and the band for their assistance, and further resolved that a copy of this motion be forwarded to the Enterprise for publication." Signed, L. W. Hull, President, S. T. Cronk,
Secretary, N. V. Mallory, Leader.

MR. L. ALLUM, of the Deseronto Cricket Club, assisted Napane in the recent match with Picton, and played a brilliant bowling and fielding performance. Napane defeated a disastrous defeat. Mr. Wm.
McLeod, of the same club, went down to Ottawa last week to play in a team representing his native country, Lanark, against the City of Ottawa. Lanark won. Mr. Mc-Leod contributed a good score for the success of the team.

WE are aware, without fear of contradiction, to state that no prettier view can be had in the Bay of Quinte district than that which presents itself from the hill immediately to the rear of the Roman Catholic Church. This is especially the case at this season of the year when the foliage shows its full beauty. The hill is a high one, and the bay, the Napane river, and the adjoining country are all in full view of the observer, who cannot fail to be struck with the charming prospect extended to his view.
The hill is a high one, and the view from other towns along the bay, it must be admitted that Deseronto occupies a particularly favorable location, and we are glad to learn that many strangers have been attracted by its beauty and advantages which it offers. Deseronto and vicinity should attract a large number of tourists, we believe,
from the number of persons of leisure that a home of many persons of leisure.

THE formal opening of the Exhibition
Grounds and Exposition of the Gananoque
Horticultural Society, will take place next Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 5th and 6th.
Sir A. C. Cameron and Rev. J. H. Pope will present the opening, which will doubtless attract great multitudes. The Grand Trunk will carry passenger on Monday at single fare, and on following day atone and a third fare. We have received a kindly invitation from the managers to be present at the opening. It is as true as ever that a prophet is not without honor save in his own village and country.

MR. JAMES SCANTLIN with a number of men has been examining the roads of Napane for the proposed extension of the railway from Tammworth to Picton. The roads are in excellent condition, abounding in valuable timber and having immense deposits of white pine and other timber of great value. The roads are in excellent will be greatly benefited by the increase in railway accommodation.

SCRIBBLING books ruled, only 5 cents at

MR. JACOB MARSH will proceed with the erection of a new fence, and thus contributes his quota to the improved appearance of Main-street.

WE regret to learn of the death of Mrs.
Tokes, wife of Mr. Edward J. Tokes, of the Petersburgh Review, the said event having occurred on Saturday last.

YOUNG Robert Norris had his hand very severely crushed on Tuesday afternoon while working on the re-saw in the sash factory. He was attended by Dr. Newton, and the patient is progressing favorably.

THE Reeve has been quite successful in his negotiations with the lumbermen of Deseronto to take place on Saturday evening at the hotel in Main-street.

THE boat race for the championship of Deseronto will take place on Saturday evening at 6:15 o'clock. The contestants are Messrs.
Campbell and Hopper, the distance one mile with a turn, and as this is the first race in the best and best boats it promises to be very exciting.

It is suggested that we direct attention to the Enterprise on the subject. Deseronto is a live man as a good point in which to establish an agency for the sale of agricultural implements. There are a dozen good openings for men who will look sharp and advertise.

THE Enterprise took advantage of the vacancy in the village last week to let him hold a grand field day. The history note suffered, and it is calculated that there was not a tree within a radius of five miles but was peeled and battered by a crew of busting assailants.

MR. L'ESTRANGE.

CHAPTER II.

A good night's rest, calm weather, and the fair scenes of Queenstown harbour had a wonderful effect upon my health and spirits, when I went on deck the next morning. A quiet walk, a quiet talk, for the talk still further exhilarated me, and I felt quite companionable at the lunch-table. At it sat the American banker, whom I had so learned to like. He was very sensible, and still emphatically recommended me to conquer my qualmish propensity by a strong will. Following his example, I did enjoy many of the good things the ship set before me. The doctor, too, had a good time, and a most brilliant voyage, since I had begun to eat rationally.

"You know, Charley," said he, "that if you are enjoying yourself, I will give you a better time; but if you are sick and shut up in your cabin, I shall have to waltz upon you; and that will be a loss of opportunity that cannot come again; so keep up, old fellow; you are a man of spirit, and a good deal to do yourself, will you?" You are fond of reading; I don't want to touch a book while afloat; so keep up, Charley."

Mr. L'Estrange heard all this, and it seemed to him to be in keeping with the bill of fare. He was a trumpery and quite personal conversation, yet it was not uninteresting to our neighbor. His ears almost pricked up like a terrier's when I said: "Theodore, you are a mere boy, and yet you are assoning to be a man of the world. You are on board a ship, of all places in the world! Don't be too self confident; and don't be lieve in all you hear, even if it seems true! We may have for passengers the most illustrious and illustrious persons alive; on the contrary, Do not let your rash credulity carry you too far. Certainly, I cannot see what great mischief could befall you over-gullibility on the voyage; still, my good boy, be wary."

"I see, then," I replied right into the big, bold eyes of Mr. L'Estrange, who dropped the bill of fare almost simultaneously with his eyes, and he turned to me as he plucked it up, with a faint smile, saying: "I see that there is a small pincushion salmed set down here, and you venture to try it."

The question was wholly irrelevant, and the tone in which it was asked was forced to a degree. I simply shook my head, and turned to Theodore, who began to defend himself in a manner that I could not but feel that Mr. L'Estrange was looking, and listening intently. Not wishing to prolong our fraternal contention, I suddenly swung round the revolving chair upon which I sat, and faced the man with whom I had conversed on the previous night. I thought I had detected a certain foreboding in the eyes of those of Mr. L'Estrange's who had looked at me; for again wheeling back, I saw that person looking over my head.

Of course, the fancies of a slow man are often ridiculous and wrong; and the suspicions of a calculating one, to my subjective perspective family, to be bound up in some dangerous manner, and for some end in which my affadwars concerned. I wished that Theodore would drop the intimacy with the banker; I began to fear the man. Yet how monstrously absurd was this fastidious, refined, and "well-born" youth! He was ostensibly rich, superior to us all that impels man to take advantage of men. Even if he were a plundering wolf in sheep's clothing, he could not despoil us. All our cash, amounting to some four hundred pounds, was in my keeping, safe in my trust. Theodore never told me I was, and had been always, the financier of the family. I was going to buy the farm about which we had been in trey while in England, for the owner was known to my uncle, and I had a right to it. Theodore had no money; therefore he could not be robbed to any extent worth speaking of. Even had I been infatuated with L'Estrange, he would have had no opportunity to rob me. If we were disposed to enter into any speculations with him. Indeed, all that followed of sudden, and robbery, like madmen, and I asked myself if I passed in a deck if I were going lunatic. What justification had I for the conglomeration of charges that I was bringing against a gentleman of noble respectability, of reputed influence in the most aristocratic of America, and who had simply shown a slight inclination to my brother, and given me advice rather egotistically? "My good fellow," I muttered to myself, "you aren't being too committing; come forth that will make the voyage a pain to yourself; and a misery to Thee."

I sat down upon my deck-chair, wrapping myself in a long rug, for the wind was chilly. I must have fallen into a sleep, for when I awoke, the ship was in motion; we had left Queenstown. At a while, my thoughts recurred to the man who had asked me so much; for I heard Theodore and L'Estrange talking and laughing, though, I could not tell where. Inseparably, I had noted my thoughts about a man which I had, accidentally, met in France, and by which I attained to so rapid a knowledge of the language of that country, that I spoke it like a native ere my studies were finished. My soliloquy was, however, cut short, as I turned my head, and saw receding on a long, dark form of a woman, heaped up with hair, and the face covered by a thick veil. Where she had come from I could not guess; whether she had been at Queenstown or Liverpool, certainly she was not in my present position when I saw her. She must have known something that I could not catch. I looked more intently. She coughed, that deep exhalation of a woman, indolent but on occasion, and with forebodings at all end. I could not avert my eyes from her.

When the coughing fit subsided, she moved her head uneasily, and in a low voice said: "I detest you French!"

"Now, then, I answered, astonished, and half rising from my deck-chair.

"Why, then, do you speak in French?" she demanded, still using that language.

"I am not aware that I have been speaking in it at all," I said. "I am alone, as you see."

"But you have been speaking, saying such sorrowful things of your mother, your sisters, your brother. And you speak French so naturally. Are you a Canadian?"

"No; I am an Englishman; but I was educated in France. — You are French, I suppose, madame."

"No; I am an American, born at New Orleans. But my parents were French. I have it from my mother. 'Pardon, madame!'" she said, delighted to have the opportunity of conversing with you, madame," I said.

"In France, I spent the happiest hours of my life; and I am passionately fond of it now. Following his example, I did enjoy many of the good things the ship set before me. The doctor, too, had a good time, and a most brilliant voyage, since I had begun to eat rationally."

"You know, Charley," said he, "that if you are enjoying yourself, I will give you a better time; but if you are sick and shut up in your cabin, I shall have to waltz upon you; and that will be a loss of opportunity that cannot come again; so keep up, old fellow; you are a man of spirit, and a good deal to do yourself, will you?"

Theodore continued to press me, using that boyish parramourism, which I could not bear. The lady watched him with eyes that I could see dilate, glisten, and glow through the meshes of her veil. She did not speak, and took not the slightest notice of the lady. Our dispute ended by the maid of the lady coming up, and preparing to assist at the meal. The banker, too, told me of her, hoping to have the pleasure of many conversations during our voyage. She bowed, and walked slowly away.

"Who is that lady?" asked Theodore. "I do not know; I have never seen her."

"I see that she is a good pincushion salmed set down here, and you venture to try it."

The question was wholly irrelevant, and the tone in which it was asked was forced to a degree. I simply shook my head, and turned to Theodore, who began to defend himself in a manner that I could not but feel that Mr. L'Estrange was looking, and listening intently.

"I see that she is a good pincushion salmed set down here, and you venture to try it."

"What sort of a thing is that, Charley? I never saw one. But never mind what I look like; take yours. — It's really true; I have a pincushion salmed set down here, and you never see it again."

"That I never play any game for money," said L'Estrange, who was at once more strait-laced than I.

"Charley, you are altogether too strait-laced!" exclaimed my brother. "Let us play for a shilling. There is no fun in playing for nothing."

"I will play for a cent will I play," I cried angrily, for Theodore's words and manner I asked.

FOR THE FARMER.

Dairy and Stock Topics.

Winter dairying is one remedy against low prices for butter.

It may be well to remember that the changing of pasture occasionally makes fat stock.

Past for either milk or beef: you can't make anything at raising bones or hides. The art of that business can beat any dairy farmer.

A Mississippi farmer dashes cold water in to the ears of "choking cattle." This causes the animal to shake its head violently, and the muscular action dislodges the obstruction.

In feeding stock in the barnyard always place the fodder in racks. If placed on the ground, as it is in many cases, much of the fodder is wasted by being scattered around and trampled under foot.

Feed a milch cow that has up her milk after calving with a large mass of warm straw while being milked, and her attention will be so diverted that she will yield without remembering her calf.

Toe small potatoes found in digging the early crop, if boiled and mixed with a little meal, will make a meal for growing pigs, keeping them thrifty and fat. A time comes for heavier feeding and fattening.

One of the good effects of the low prices for dairy products will be the turning off of many poor cows, never of any value for dairy purposes. Certainly a farmer will be tempted to keep poor cows at present prices of butter and cheese.

Do not let your cow, but her calf or two to her and let them do the milking. An average cow will raise four calves to veal ages during a season, and these will bring $40 to $50. This is often more than can be made from her milk.

The habit of kicking, which is utterly detestable, should from the very first, in every instance, be traced to arrows or vice in early education of the animal; so, too, with the bad habit of withholding the milk and all others which are often complained of.

Sheep will eat the green wormy apple more readily than big ones. In fact, the latter have to be partially starved to make them as good foragers as sheep. But the sheep must also be well fed, or some enterprising wile will a taste of apple tree bark, and soon make sad havoc.

No kind of stock is kindly to a hand of bad, being supplied by its large, stiff and sharp claws. What is left on the Sud is therefore wasted except for its value as a green manure. The takings of barley are always more stained than the bulk of the crop, and should be kept and threshed separately.

The genuine stone crock with its glazing of glass makes a perfect package of butter, but the common clay crock, with its salt wash of vitreous glaze, is often a delusion in butter keeping; but what can be done is to cover the butter with a thin layer of water and then cover with cold water to 113 degrees Fahrenheit. The latter yielded one third more milk.

A great width between and prominence of the eyes indicates a teachable and tractable horse. Width between the ears indicates courage, and between the eyes, a desire to enter. Soundness and elevation between the eyes indicate mildness of disposition and desire to be caressed and to reciprocate kindness; but never trust one that shows much white above the pupil of the eye or with white in that orbit.

Ground grain is the cheapest form in which nutrition can be given to working horses. But to produce the best effect it should be mixed with oat hay, not to give greater bulk, for this the horse's stomach does not require, but to make the food more porous in the stomach, so that the gases may easily find their way through it. Meal, either of corn, which some say has any chaff, will compact in the stomach and be less easily digestible.

Stock can be kept cheaply by a judicious use of manure. Now we again recommend our friends that there are no vesting that if these properties preserve the straw and corn fodder, and use a cutter for preparing such, they can keep more stock; all that is necessary being the feeding of grain ration daily. Thousands of tons of straw are now used in building, and on farms in farms for cattle that no sheep and but few cows or steers, when at the same time a fair profit could as easily be derived for such waste materials as to suffer the loss.

Home Suggestions.

When sponge cake becomes dry it is nice to cut it in slices and toast it.

Black linen thread should be kept wrapped in paper or away from the light which rots it.

Water in which borax is dissolved is good for the hair, and also to whiten the face and hands.

Hot wood ashes applied to a stove when cold will remove grease. Cover the spot entirely; do not be sparing of the ashes.

The wings of turkeys, geese and chickens are good to wash and clean windows with, as they leave no dust or dirt, as cloths do.

Lemon juice with a few drops of orange or strawberry juice, when cold, is a good, and the best kind of an orange strained through a cloth will color it yellow.

Braids are a new material recently introduced for embroidery, and in the construction of the awo-hall or clew design it may be used with the most satisfactory results.

Lord will remove wags' grease. Bob the spot with lard as if wasing it, and when it is well out wash in the ordinary way with soap and water until thoroughly cleaned.

Chloride of lime will remove mildew, unless it be very bad. Use four parts water to two of lime, and wash cloth in this till the mildew disappears, and rinsing afterwards with plenty of cold water.

It said the following preparation w'll drive a mosquito out of the room whenever one is found the Sud school superintendent, who the new boy said, "Not having any."

A Patterson man has a horse which sings. It never urges a colt as an excuse. Neither does it say neigh when an cat is set before it.

A sponge is excel'ent for washing windows and newspapers will polish them without scratch or streaks. Use a soft pine stick to clean the windows. A piece of pine dust from the corner of the glass. Ammonia will give the glass a clearer look than soap.

A new remedy for clearing a cold: Pour about half a pint of boiling hot water over a spoonful of powdered camphor, and inhale the vapors for twenty minutes.

Great relief is at once experienced, and after two or three repetitions the discomfort is said to disappear entirely.

Recently saw a satin dress which had been washed, and looked almost like new.

No soap was used, but the dress was soiled in borax water which restored the gloss.

One objection to a satin dress is that it never looks well in the ordinary sun. The author is worth trying.

Heavy carpets sometimes do not require taking up every summer, but do not take out the tufts from three, fold the carpet back, wash the floor in strong soap with a tablespoonful of borax dissolved in water, lay the carpet on the floor and return it to its original position.

It is a good way to wash a carpet.

The author is worth trying.

A convenient receptacle for table cutlery, to be tucked to the inside of a cupboard door, is made of a piece of cardboard, so constructed, that there will be a secure compartment for each knife and fork. The flange is sure to absorb any moisture left on a knife by carelessness or by accident, and the whole affair is ornamental. White Canton damask bound with scarlet dress brand, is the prettiest.

The Balkan Situation.

From the mass of contradictory, equivocal and delusive intelligence relating to the coming crisis caused by the rising in Romeil, emerged the broad fact of delay. Delay means disaster to the Sultan, who probably had bad faith on the part of one or more of the other parties to the contract entered into at Berlin.

Had the Porte at this grave crisis obeyed the instinct of self-preservation, and delayed in executing its action to the last, and in doing so, had it prompt to apply, upon receiving news of the rebellion, notified the other signatory powers of its purpose to enforce the rights assured to it by treaty, and almost simultaneously despatched the 7,000 Turkmen to the Balkans, he would have had the right with the utmost ease have secured Philippiopolis, re-bated the deposed Governor, occupied the Balkan passes, and announced that the incident was closed. But, haunted by natural forebodings that the Russian troops, who had been sent to the Balkans, had been instigated by Russia, and was, perhaps, countenanced by Austria, it missed the fateful opportunity, and allowed the rebels to transform what was essentially a Turkish into a European question. By way of a compromise, the Sultan, who had been compelled by the circumstances already conveyed by treaty, it gave time for a counter appeal from Prince ALEXANDER, and emboldened Russia to so far throw of the mask as to propose a conference for the pretended purpose of deciding the question or whether the demands of the rebels should be restored.

There is no occasion for a conference if all of the signatory powers mean to comply with the obligations to which they pledged themselves in 1878. The Berlin treaty itself defined the mode by which the provinces should be exercised.

The Porte is to be the only one to be blamed for abstaining from actually occupying the Balkan passes owing to an unwillingness to cause unnecessary friction, and upon the supposition that it could easily be done. An appeal from the Porte to the present question there is, indeed, a stipulation that the Porte shall not send Turkish soldiers into the provinces until after informing the powers of the exigencies requiring the coercion. But, of course, this qualifying phrase is not to be construed by the Sultan as a permit to the hands of the Porte to repossess the Balkans.

The Tribune.

FRIDAY, OCT. 16, 1885.

Lord Salisbury announces that Parliament will be dissolved on November 17th. The coming election promises to be the most exciting ever held in the British Isles, and by many it is thought that the issue will be doubtful. The Toronto Mail on a review of the situation think that the Liberals will win, and certainly all the indications lead to such a conclusion. In Ireland it is thought that of 103 seats Parnell will carry 96, while the remaining 15 will be divided between the Liberals and Conservatives. Scotland is radical to the core and it is thought that only three Conservatives will be returned in that country. Wales is like Scotland, only more so, and it is thought will return a solid Liberal vote. The great struggle will be in England where all hinges on an agricultural vote with great probabilities of its being given to Mr. Gladstone to whom the laborers owe the franchise.

The Mail in a late editorial throws a copious quantity of cold water on the Imperial Federation movement which was gaining considerable headway among many people in this country. The Mail is discreet enough to perceive that with Imperial Federation the manufacturers of the Dominion would soon find themselves brought face to face with the competition of British manufacturers and that the National Policy would soon be no more. However desirable Imperial Federation would be for the farmers of Canada, to whom it would be almost as great a boon as reciprocity with the United States, to the manufacturers it would mean ruin. Our manufacturers at present control parliament and hence this sudden change of attitude on the question. The Governor-General in his recent speech in Irish Col umbia also throws cold water on the Federation movement. "Let well enough alone" is now to be the motto. People however are never satisfied in these progressive days with that old maxim, and it is altogether probable that in a few years the great issue will be independence versus the present state of British connection.

YOUNG PEOPLES CONCERT.—The young people of the Methodist Church will give one of their popular Concerts in the Church, on Wednesday evening next, Oct. 21st. A splendid programme is being prepared.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

A prominent citizen living a few miles from the city of Oswego, N. Y., is charged with the killing of a large number of deer, mails from the canal and surrounding country, and boiling their flesh, on which he has been fattening hogs and selling the fattened animals for food. The Oswego Board of Health will investigate the matter.

A despatch from Tampico says that Sergt. Mathew, who was with the police investigating the man just committed murder. He first killed the woman he was living with and then ran amuck through the streets stabbing many persons and fatally wounding two. He was finally captured and gaol'd.

Mr. Parnell, speaking in Kilbarry, Ireland, referred in terms of highest praise to Archbishops Walsh and Crooke. The former, he said, was one of the strongest supporters of the cause given to Ireland, while Archbishop Crooke's support was given to all. The stand they had taken had won the union of the priests and people. In regard to boycotting he said the practice was pursued but only by the Irish leaders and that they did not do it.

Careful calculations show that the Conservatives in France will probably number about 210 in the new Chamber, M. Clemenceau's party 124, and M. Boulanger's party other shades 120. M. Boulanger's position thus places him in second place in the Parliament. Mr. Parnell has nothing upon any important division with either party to turn the scales as he likes. It is but too probable that he will use his tactics in such a way as to render any stable Government majority impossible.

Mr. Wm. Deane left by the Quinte yesterday for Belleville on stenographic business.

Mr. D. G. Solmes has recovered from his recent illness.

Mr. & Mrs. G. A. Brownie returned on Wednesday evening from their wedding tour. They were cordially welcomed by a large number of friends.

Mr. Parnell, speaking in Kilbarry, Ireland, referred in terms of highest praise to Archbishops Walsh and Crooke. The former, he said, was one of the strongest supporters of the cause given to Ireland, while Archbishop Crooke's support was given to all. The stand they had taken had won the union of the priests and people. In regard to boycotting he said the practice was pursued but only by the Irish leaders and that they did not do it.

Careful calculations show that the Conservatives in France will probably number about 210 in the new Chamber, M. Clemenceau's party 124, and M. Boulanger's party other shades 120. M. Boulanger's position thus places him in second place in the Parliament. Mr. Parnell has nothing upon any important division with either party to turn the scales as he likes. It is but too probable that he will use his tactics in such a way as to render any stable Government majority impossible.

Grandmother.

BY A. D. CHAMBERS.

I have a pretty corner in my home,
One where the glowing embers come;—
For when the glowing embers have set,
Grandmother's cushion lights the corner up.

Her features have the radiance of love;
Her eyes are bright, her smile is dove;
Her silver hair a crown of glory shines,
Her winning way all and all hearts entwines.

The very wrinkles on her placid face
Seem to have a charm;—she is so fair,
And to enhance her beauty as forsooth
D. d. aries on the "all plump cheek of youth."

The children know grandmather's corner well,
And run to her when they are ill;—
They are all that are dear to me;—
And I will fill up again with sunshine bright.

No clouds ever dim grandmather's corner bright;
For she is as learned full well as the sun of light;
She draws in cheerful patient her supply,
And scatters it to every corner.

Dear Grandmather, you will every home and heart
Have a bright blessing; it is as that art.
Long by thy life, and lighter still thy day,
Until upon thee shall bea Heaven's p'ste rays.

Half Won.

When once a firm receive is made,
Half will the battle's won.

Growing Together.

A morn's heart and smiling face
Are better far than sunny weather;
A noble life and loves of grace
Lies leaves and flowers grow will together.

MR. L'ESTRANGE.

A TALE OF AN ATLANTIC LINER.

CHAPTER III.

The reputation of the Atlantic Ocean has been as utterly lost, that no abuse of it by me can defame it. As the most whimsical, wrathful, spiteful of oceans, it is but too well known. It was my fate to be a victim of its tempests; and I have been enabled to prove that a poor nervous invalid can suffer. Storms blow all round the compass. I seemed to be rolling right and day unceasingly, now in this direction, now in that. My bed was like a bower, I like a log, tamely lying down, and the waves, as I lay there, would only spoke of the string of tempests as spring gales of rather a gentle sort. I have the impression that I did not sleep during these six days and nights; but this nobody will credit. I admit that I was often in a state of semi-coma, incapable of using limbs or sense, yet conscious of what was going on near me.

Theodore was a born sailor; the more Boreas blew, the livelier he became. For the first two days, the kind fellow tended me like a child; but the third day the doctor to see me, ministered to my hurts, and turned me with the robust man's consolations. I begged him to leave me in peace. The third day he obeyed me almost literally; for on that day I do not remember seeing him, except when he came to bed. His birth was over, and he had no more to do. He had struggled to get into it, which put me into a fever to witness. I thought it was the racing waters that made him so clumsy; I now know that he had been drinking champagne. On the fourth day I saw little of him; the fifth, he came into our cabin, and left again hurriedly. He always spoke to me, and appeared to look at me with a peculiar anxiety. Once the steward came to the door and could not open it. Theodore rose from the floor, and, in an agitated voice, said, "It is my brother; he has not opened the door, which he has bolted." I was getting a little better, and this incident struck me. Subsequent events no doubt intensified my remembrance. I seemed to know that something fortunate was going on, and was uneasy, but too shattered by weakness to care.

The sixth day, Theodore remained in his berth until the afternoon. I heard him groan over my head several times and toss about uneasily. About four o'clock he got up, after drinking his fourth glass of brandy and soda. The brandy was strong, but never took his eyes from the floor. I grew alarmed as I watched him. At first I thought he was going to be sea-sick after all; that the reckless indulgence in food, drink, and tobacco had given his point of gastrification. But the exertion, which cut out deeper and deeper into his face, making it whiter more marble-like continually, was not that of a sickening man; or rather, it was the manifestation of a mind diseased.

"What's all, Theodore?" I asked, in a tone so hoarse that I did not recognize my own voice. Illness had indeed changed me in every way.

"It is a bad feel, Theodore?" "Me!" rubbing his head with both hands energetically. "Charley! Why, you know I am always first class." "Don't try to impose upon me, brother; you are ill worse than I have been."

"I am ill. What on earth do you mean?" His face was scarlet; he shook, and he caught at the side of the berth, till all were falling.

I got on to my elbow and tried to leave the bed. The effort was too great; my head ached; I fell back heavily. I lay still awhile. Theodore returned to his berth on the sofa, and again fixed his eyes on the floor as before. The dinner-bell rang.

"Are you going to dinner, Theodore?" I asked.

"I don't feel, Theodore."

"Me!" rubbing his head with both hands energetically. "Charley! Why, you know I am always first class."

Theodore, I knelt upon knowing what has produced this extraordinary change in you. Tell me, or I will get up and bring the doctor. What has made you ill?"

"Really and truly, Charley, I am not ill at all; a bit out of sorts.—I am still; you are as weak as a kitten.—What will you have for dinner?"

"I will not eat, until you tell me what is preying upon your mind. You frightened me, Theodore. Only something of the most extraordinary nature could have metamorphosed you into the haggard, harassed wretch that you have become. You are a parrot without a tongue."

He laughed, a wild, passionate, mocking laugh, and turned his head from me.

The steward knocked at the door, calling to me, that I would have some dinner.

"I will say something, Charley," said Theodore who became suddenly collected,

"I will dine with you—Here, steward, come in."

The door opened, the steward entered, and with him the doctor. After a few inquiries regarding my health, the latter said to Theodore: "I want to show you those things I spoke of in my letter."

My heart leaped to him with intense interest, then a flush of understanding shot into his eyes, and he said, in a quavering voice: "I will be with you in five minutes; I am not dressed ed."

I had been alone many instances, when the steward entered my room in a stealthy manner, and came close to me, whispering:

"Has your brother told you?"

"Told me! What? What?"

"Are you in the pocket-book?" he answered whisperingly.

"Yes."

"Who won it?" I demanded, a sudden curiosity arising in me. Up to this point, I had been oblivious of the history of Theodore's gambling transactions; now it seemed that he ought to know how the boy had gone wrong. In my effort to adjust myself to a new and dangerous situation, I must begin at the beginning.

"Who won the money from you?"

"A young man. He is named Barker."

"Did L'Estrange win anything from you?"

"Tell me all about it. I am setting down, Besides, you have told me the work."

"O Charley, I do not know how I can expose my infamy to without you sparing me from you, as the most cruel and infatuated of the world."

"Tell me all the facts of the talk, Theodore. Tell me the bare facts. Who is this man Barker? An acquaintance of L'Estrange's?"

"No, so they are total strangers, I assure you. L'Estrange has lost more than I have."

"Enough of generalities; come to particulars. Tell me all, and from the beginning."

"I will, Charley.—Well, I first played with L'Estrange, just we two. I was a lot of money from him, I don't know how. He almost seemed to be giving it to me. We played at whist, double dummy. You remember, and the champagne and the champagne, and the greenback, and the greenback?"

"Well, from that I fell into a gambling fever, and I won from L'Estrange quite a hundred pounds. Then others began to play with us the man Barker, and a young gentleman, the son of an English nobleman; he also lost a great deal to L'Estrange; but L'Estrange, when we began to play at American games, that I never had heard of, quick games, over in a few minutes. It went on day by day. I was always in a state of exhaustion; I had five hundred pounds in my pocket, though I was going to make our fortune before getting ashore. It was not for the money, Charley I swear it was not; it was to make us both rich, so that we might send for mother and sisters when we delay. I really did think that we were destined to obtain a heap of money."

"Poor simpleton!" I interrupted.

"And do you believe that money so got could bring a blessing to us? Do you think that I wo'd have shamed in the fruits of gambling?"

"Not, Charley; I am not a man, and afraid of nothing."

"I thought you were a man, and afraid of nothing."

"I am not a man, and the arsefines of my remedy I am not."

"These dreadful words tore my soul as grape-stone raves the flesh. I stared into the eyes of the miserable boy. I placed my hands on his shoulders, and, looking into his eyes, I looked into the depths of his being. 'Explain yourself, Charley. Have you seriously injured L'Estrange?'

"L'Estrange, Charley!" Here he assumed an expression utterly unlike what I had expected, that I believed he had gone from the author of it. What have you done?"

"Don't, don't speak like that, Charley; I can't bear it."

"He looked at me as the bird, half frightened at half, half confident.

I turned to increase the light, and he again became restless. "Now, Theodore, cut out it. No good can come from delay, and concealment is impossible; others will tell me. Let me know the extent of my shame from the author of it. What have you done?"

"I don't, don't speak like that, Charley; I can't bear it."

MR. L'ESTRANGE.

CHAPTER IV.—(Concluded.)

Exp sure to the strong air of the ocean began to make my drowsy; I went down to begin to get a little sleep. My happy boy was very tired, and so despondent that we had all thoughts of sleep away from me. I was more grieved by his suffering than by his toil, and exerted myself to the utmost to comfort him.

After leaving him again, I stood at the port to watch the setting of the soft air. A gentle touch upon the arm roused me from my contemplation. I turned, and saw one of the stowards with a letter in his hand for me. "Greatly surprised I opened it, and found the postscript run thus: 'L'Estrange has your money.' He is a professional gambler, working with confederates. Go to him; declare that you know him and his associates; and it will be all right. Why did he tell me I was a professional gambler? Why has he acted so unjustly towards me? I am no pretender to integrity, I assure you. Here is my card. When you reach New York, you will find me in ten minutes that I am what I say. I am."

"I pray, do not continue this sort of fiction. I know all about you, Mr. L'Estrange. Neither your bluster nor your hypocrisy will turn me from my point. You have only one argument that can prevail with me, that is to put to four hundred and fifteen pounds in unmarketable currency into my hands."

He glared at me like a ferocious animal in a trap. Then he assumed an amused smile, saying: "Well, I have had a pretty fair example of human nature; but I tell you, sir, you are the toughest opponent I have met."

"I am a desperate man, Mr. L'Estrange. You and your gang have ruined me, and blasted my brother's career at the start. If I had thought that an appeal to your pity would have caused a restoration of all we have lost, I would have given up the struggle. Now, however, when the man was a beast of prey! No time must be lost. I had an unpleasant scene before me, and had better get it over without delay. I went to the port of my ship, examining the stowards who were from the companion door. L'Estrange was not visible. I went slowly round the decks, into the smoke-room; but did not find him. I descended to the saloon; and at the far end he sat writing at the table set apart for that purpose. Now, however, when the man I had spoken to at the beginning of the voyage. All were writing or reading. As I stood before L'Estrange, the gentlemen lifted their heads and eyed me inquisitively."

"Can I have a few moments' conversation with you?" I asked, I derived from L'Estrange.

He started, paled for an instant, looked hurriedly round the table, then smiled. "I should be obliged to oblige you, sir," he answered in a level voice; "but I am writing just now."

"It is good enough to suspend it; my business is urgent."

"What do you want?" he asked, half scowling.

"I cannot tell you here; your cabin is the best place for what I have to say."

L'Estrange looked at me searchingly, while he pretended to smile, as if amazed at my queer invitation. "Can't you wait for half an hour?"

"No; not for half minute."

"Well, you are a very curious person, I must say. I will grant your request, though it is inconvenient. I suppose you want to talk about your brother?"

I bowed.

L'Estrange rose up, cast a careless glance upon the people sitting round, and led the way to his cabin. I followed him, and a word until he had got into the cabin, which was as hideous; then he said, holding the door: "Be quick with your conversation, for I shall not spare more than the five minutes you ask for. He spoke haughtily, almost contemptuously."

"One minute will accomplish my purpose," I replied, looking at him sternly.

"The length of the conversation will depend upon you, not on me. Give me the four hundred and fifteen pounds you have taken from my brother."

A cool cynical smile was the response to my demand. "Are you a fool or a knave, young man?" asked L'Estrange, after a moment. "I have lost three thousand dollars as your brother's agent, and would be given money that I either had neither nor stolen."

"Do not assume such an air with me," I cried angrily. "I know you."

"Indeed! Thee, if you know Mr. L'Estrange, banker of Wall Street, New York, you would know that he is a gentleman of honour; but the five minutes are nearly at an end."

"I care not for time; I am here to obtain my money; for it is not my brother's; he stole it from my portmanteau."

"Look here, young man, and I'll tell you, come what may. I am starting hard in my eye—look here. I tell you, as a gentleman, that I have not got any money of yours; and, I vow, if you come up to your tricks over me, I will have you over to extort money by threats. There is the double, sir; leave my cabin." The manner of the man was so imposing, and the evidence of his nature so truculent, that for a few seconds I was almost inclined to believe him.

L'Estrange paraded his advantage, and put his hand on my shoulder to thrust me outside. That tough brought back my courage. "Keep your hands off me!" I cried passionately. "If you cannot persuade me to leave, as a swindler, I will have you put out by force. Again, I demand the money you have stollen, under the semblance of gaming."

A look of savage hatred grew slowly over L'Estrange's sinister features. He stood awhile thinking, though he pretended to wait my resumption of the conversation. A flash of resolution at length blazed in his dark eyes as he said: "You may thank my self-command, young man, for not kicking you out of the ship; I would not do that for my brother's sake. I will not say any harm. But if I had you ashore, I would give you a lesson that would teach you to behave like a gentleman. It will not provoke me any more than it does you."

"I will never leave it till you have given me the money; or if you go out, I will follow you, and before all the passengers, I will repeat what I have told you. Your son's conduct for our hatred, for any harm your son's propensity can devise against me."

"Taco as you declare war to the knife, you mad fool, you shall have it," cried L'Estrange.

"I will go down to the ship to many gentlemen and the captain. I shall claim protection from a scoundrel who sees to fasten a quarrel upon me, to extort a large sum of MARVELLE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Two young Indians who had left Milltown last Saturday morning without paying for passage, attempted to enter Mr. Farrell's house during his absence from home. They must have been very courageous as it was done in the daylight. One of them, Mr. Farrell set out in pursuit and succeeded in having them arrested near Deseronto that evening.

Mr. B. McInnes is now in the happy possession of a son.

MILTON.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Hop-picking is over and potato digging well along, so the small boys excuse Iwin often to go to other houses to help. He will go to his "hopping" place to day and then he will go to school. Already the school is increasing in numbers very fast and it promises to prove large this winter.

The appearance of the schools is much improved by the painting of the windows and glass where it was needed. Doubtless, too, the scholars find it much more comfortable on cool days. The teacher received a visit this week from her cousin, Miss Johnson, of Prince Edward.

Some time has attracted attention by disorderly conduct on the railway. If continued, complaints will probably be made to the officials of the road. May this word to the wise be sufficient.

There is much lamentation over the failure of the potato crop. Even the boasted Royals are rotting.

NORTHPORT.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. Geo. Benson is very ill and the doctors think it doubtful if he recovers.

Mr. Jas. Ross and daughter, of Belleville, spent a few days with friends here.

Mr. Jas. E. H. Martin, of Cobourg, is visiting at his father's, Mr. W. H. Wilson.

Miss B. Moore has returned home after spending three weeks with friends at Toronto and other places.

Mr. Jas. Moore, of South Ste. Marie, is visiting at Mr. A. R. Campbell's.

The Quinte Cheese Company close their factory on Friday Oct. 30th.

Mr. John D. Vincent, who has been in the employ of the Cheese company for about seven years moves to Coo Hill; his many friends regret his departure as he has won for himself the reputation of a good cheese maker.

Repairs have again been taken up on the which we understand it is the owner's intention to have his barn repaired out and if so there will have to be a little more energy put forth in order to make it fit to carry a load as it is scarcely safe for the public or foot at present.

Barley seems to cause a good deal of excitement at present. Buyers are anxious to buy as much as they can. New lots are sold as yet, all of which has broken 75¢ per bushel; a bright sample sells for 70cts. The farmers have joined together and are holding for 70 cts for the round lot.

Splendid fresh Oysters arrived to-day at Geddis's.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

It is with great regret that we are called upon this week to inform our numerous readers of the serious illness of Rev. Father Meade. The Reverend gentleman has been ailing for some time although he has been active and energetic.

Last week he attended the annual retreat of the clergy in Kingston and while there was obliged to consult Dr. Sullivan who at once advised him to remain in Kingston for a time under his care.

We sincerely hope that the Reverend gentleman may soon be restored to health and regain in the midst of his faithful people whose earnest prayers in his behalf will not be wanting.

Rev. Father McCarthy of the Cathedral, Kingston arrived here Tuesday to take charge of the Mission of Northern Tyendinaga during the temporary absence of the Rev. Father Meade.

The Buckley Brothers have purchased one of the celebrated Wide Awake threshing machines made by Haag Bros., of Brantton. The Buckley brothers are known as active, energetic and reliable young men who will no doubt get all the threshing they want and we have no doubt will give every satisfaction to their patrons.

The Wide Awake is now the property of the new owners.

We have just learned that on Tuesday evening the barn and contents belonging to Mr. Charles Bennett, of the 8th con., were totally destroyed by fire. Two cows belonging to Mr. Bennett were found cut and hacked with some sharp instrument and a portion was found scattered in the pasture.

The circumstances attending this disaster evidently show it to be an incendiary fire and the world of evil disposed persons. If the facts as reported are so should be left unturned to bring the miscreants to justice and rid society of such monsters in human shape.

Your correspondent had not time to visit the place but will be able to give a more full report in next issue.

The weather has been very showery and changeable for the last few days.

The potato rot is, I am sorry to say, as bad as last reports indicated.

Mr. Cornelius McLaughlin has left for Chicago.

Miss McGee, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. John Brennan, has left for home.

Mr. James Moag, whose barn and buildings were burned a short time since, is making preparations for building again, and has drawn a large quantity of lumber from Belleville. Mr. Michael Gaffney, the contractor, will have charge of the work.

Mr. Patrick Kelly, the mill contractor, was obliged to shoot one of his dogs last week the animal having broken his leg.

Mr. Thomas McPhin has also lost a portion of his leg.

The appearance of the Mowsonian has caused quite a stir amongst local circles in Bachelors' Walks.

Miss Maggie Meagher and Miss Mary Meagher, daughters of Mr. John Meagher, have left for Troy, N. Y.

TYENDINAGA RESERVE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. Featherstone is again quite convalescent after a severe attack of illness.

Mr. M. Anderson is of the opinion of being the future organist of Christ's Church. It would be no more than right that each of the organists should be paid a liberal salary, by that way it is intended to be taken to keep up the organ's good standing.

Mr. John Green is building a neat frame dwelling on his lot adjoining the residence of Mr. T. Walker.

The project of building new fences through the Reserve is now having vigorously carried on by many of the landowners. Longer, wire, and cedar posts in large quantities can be observed laid along some of the main roads ready for construction.

Mr. J. O. Ormondale has departed for London after making her second visit to this season.

The decorations of All Saints, though now somewhat withered, nevertheless proves to the eye of a botanist far beyond the capacity of any to develop. The interior of the church is praiseworthy. The main stream that overflows the windows and other parts of the church are composed of various kinds of grain and evergreens of the forest, which possess a strong and pleasant fragrance.

The chancel windows are tastefully covered with tiny sheaves that are made like the letter "X", each of which is faced with a maple leaf; the entire work shows that much time and labor must have been spent on their execution.

The chancel, fence, pulpit, and reading desk are most beautifully finished, the chancel windows bears the following words: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." The pulpit is made of a block of wood a cross composed of grapes. Around the pulpit the words are placed the words "Praise the Lord O my soul, forget not His benefits." Fruits of the field, garden and tree are tastefully arranged all parts of the church. In all, it has been said, this decoration far surpasses all previous attempts. Those who have seen this decoration and St. Mark's, of Deseronto, express the former as superior.

A meeting was held recently by the evangelists and Plymouth brethren denouncing the action of the Convention regarding a settlement with Rev. E. H. M. Martin. The reason no doubt is attributed to the fact that an unfounded report has been circulated among the Mohawks that they are to receive no annullition of their title.

The writer who gave an account of Rev. E. H. M. Baker's farewell picnic, through timidity perhaps, abstained to mention Jesus Martin as the bestower of the generosity on that occasion, spoke of "The Martin family."

The son of the late Rev. Mr. Martin, two little girls who are frequently seen with him, Cate and Sophia, have returned home after spending three weeks with friends at Toronto and other places.

Miss Anna Moore, of South Ste. Marie, is visiting at Mr. A. R. Campbell's.

The Last Stake.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN BY S. R. ABBOTT, DUNHAM, ONT.

Count Dassel lifted the bat. "The time has come, Count Dassel has lost what he pledged, his all, His feelings, his adown, his heart, his soul, his health, his health, his heart, his breath, his life." "Now, count, say, 'This throw our former friends made; You are a fool, you are a fool, you are a fool.' None can. Count Dassel, now with you company. I've seen the cover of your book, it has been my pride; That book, it was increasing every day, I pay that let it now in my life again; The horses say, 'We are the best, we are the best, we are the best.'"

Count Reichenbach, struck by his hand and cried, "You who so greatly won in knightly wise, But Reichenbach in a year more are the old, Once only yours is the all."

Count Reichenbach then his people called straightforward: "Count Dassel, you are a fool today; Then be himself along the furrow goes, And low in it the horse goes, the horse goes, now."

"He is a fool, indeed," Count Dassel retorts, "If I am a fool, then Reichenbach is a fool; Ere this crop-sows will have me to take."

His horse, his horse, his horse, his horse, his own, Nothing more will we play such foolish games, Let us pursue together, horses alone."

And still looks down upon the neighboring ground The castle of the great and grand, And the tale is told him, over a game, The Counts' firm friends, and noble knights bemoan.

SENTENCED TO SIBERIA.

(CONCLUDED)

That was about the substance of the fellow's answer. His appearance seemed to bear out his statements, and I was inclined to believe him. "It's a hard life," I said, "to be a man of all callings for a walk of a thousand versts, if I let you go. You might as well talk of flying. You have not the strength to walk ten. You would only fall by the roadside. You are a man of all callings, and sit in idleness. I should be doing the bitter thing by you if I handed you over to the authorities. If I do let you go, I must give you something to eat first. Come with me."

The miserable wretch hardly believed that I really meant to feed him, and would have run away had he dared. I took him into the empty house, of which I had the key, and brought him as much food as I thought it safe for him to eat.

So I said to him, "I am a soft-hearted old fool, too kind for my own good."

I took him in the empty house for several days, in fact, till he had recovered his strength as to be fit to go on. Nobody knew about him, not even the members of my own family, for I was doing a foolish thing. I had seen enough of the world to know that there are factories. Every man tries to make out a good case for himself, so I did not feel myself bound to place implicit reliance on Fedor's statement that he had never committed anything that could properly be called a crime. I had no money, but the only source of his troubles had been a difference with a police officer—a police agent. I do not exactly remember the particulars, but, of course, there was a woman in the business; blows had passed, and the wretched had, by a false charge, procured Fedor's condemnation to Siberia for life. This, I was, was his story.

Fedor told me that his place of exile had been somewhere far up the country; and of the severities he had had to endure, and of the many miseries he had suffered. After making his escape, the privations and dangers he had undergone before reaching Ekaterinburg were such as I should not have believed from his words, had they not been verified by his appearance.

For when he appeared to me he was not unlike a gaunt, thin, gaunt old man. I pointed out to him the difficulties he would find in making his way to Irkutsk—a distance of not less than two hundred versts from Ekaterinburg, as the crow flies; and advised him, as he was about to go to work, to lay and find employment where he was. I had not enough to offer to help him, and see what could be done in the way of getting a passport for him. But the fellow was bent on going to Irkutsk, and he had to be told to see Basil Makarov. This half-crazed wretch, I found, the cowardice to whom Fedor attributed his trouble, and it seemed to me that this particular hampering to see that person was owing to his having a revenge, a confession of his having left his wife, and a fear that he would be found by his friend Fedor, longer than was necessary. I was glad to give him something more decent in the way of clothing than he had brought, and a trifle in money to help him along.

I never expected so much to be rid of him. His family agreed with me that he was unworthy to do so; and I was somewhat startled when a few weeks later, among a gang of convicts which were being marched by a guard, I saw him out of the town on their way eastward. I recognized Stepanovitch. I was standing close by when he passed, and was so much surprised to see him, that I somewhat imprudently, perhaps, spoke to him by name. But, will you believe it? the unshaven dog stared me in the face, and made such a noise by without word or sign of recognition. "So much," thought I, "so gratitude!"

Some months later, when the next summer was getting well advanced, we had one night as we were sitting in the new house at Ekaterinburg of stone, but the main building of ours, being comparatively old, was of wood. It was a thing to blaze up like a box of matches. It was not, however, in the main building that the fire had broken out, but in some sheds connected with the main building by a range of shopping. This last was stone built, but as ill luck would have it, covered with wooden shingles.

As I was sitting with a few others together, mostly our own hands, and I was talking, encouraged them as well as I could to get the fire under. But they were a scold, weary set of fellows, these Russians, and the way in which they did it is enough to set themselves in a fit as enough to do in an Englishman wild. Yet there were some few worked well, and one fellow, in particular, I noticed, a ragged fellow, a beggar I took him to be, who really worked splendidly, and in that way that ought to have made many of those whose daily bread depended on the extraction of the millet ashamed of themselves.

What better could be done than to lay out a great rally, and want of water, it was soon plain that the shods which were on fire could not be saved, and that what we had to look for was the end.

The flames were increasing every moment, the fire was beginning to make its way along the shingled roof of which I spoke.

I told him what had to be done—those shods had to be stripped off. I had a ladder raised against the building, and called for volunteers to mount it. The roof of that roof from the ground was considerable, and the shods were getting more and more held upon it. To strip off the shods would be a hard job, and a hot one, and it is not to be denied, a dangerous one. Not one of those who did not feel safe in the shods, but for you would come forward. I stood at the foot of the ladder, and told them I was going up myself. I offered twenty rubles—fifty rubles—to any man who would help me. But it was of no use. Just when I was about to mount alone, the rugged stranger fellow, whom I had before observed working so vigorously, ran up, and said, "I will help you, and I am a good man." I was about to say, "I am a beggar. Every knob I am worth is nothing." A hundred rubles I will help me save it!"

"I am a beggar, I am a beggar. Every knob I am worth is nothing." A hundred rubles I will help me save it!"

"I am a beggar, I am a beggar. Every knob I am worth is nothing." A hundred rubles I will help me save it!"

THE Council would be acting in accord with healthy public opinion if it would get estimates for the new market buildings,

AT a late meeting of the Belleville City Council some members proposed the issue of all the fair of the County into a general

one good fair at Belleville would be a great improvement on the present system.

It is said that certain young men refuse to submit to the poll tax recently levied on them. They plead infamy as their reason for this conduct, but unless they adopt George Washington's course of non-resistance, their half-hearted measures will prove of no avail. Colle-ford Geddis will invade their stronghold, said to be situated not a thousand miles from the Central Office. Even though one young man remains he will be glad to head him off if he does.

LOOK OUT FOR THE POTATO ROT.

In many parts of the country potato rot is doing great damage this year. It is the same disease, an exchange tells us, that first appeared in Ireland in 1847, and caused the great famine. The disease begins in the same manner, known as primocarca infestationis, which grows within the plant, filling the cells with white threads called mycelium. These threads break the walls of the spores and causing the spores to become small, appearing as fine dust. It is these black spores which discolor the potato when the capsules burst and liberate them.

These spores are the seed from which new plants grow. They remain in the soil in the diseased potatoes left in the ground, and in the diseased ground, thus infecting the land and leaving a soil to propagate a pest for future years.

The spores (which are like the fine dust of the ripe puff balls, or the dry smut of corn, float off into the air, and are carried by the wind and spread over fresh ground, and the infected field. To avoid this the diseased potatoes should be carefully gathered up and boiled (by which the fungus is killed) and fed swine or fowls. The vines should be carefully burned and never used to propagate any other plant. The spores (which are like the fine dust of the ripe puff balls, or the dry smut of corn, float off into the air, and are carried by the wind and spread over fresh ground, and the infected field. The professor believes that this is the extreme jump a salmon is capable of and points out that, of course, not all are capable of performing thisfeat.

FROM MANY SOURCES.

"Tax whiskey to death" is the motto of temperance adherents in the South, where drinking is slightly on the decline.

Canon Farrar, in his lecture on Dante, declares the "Divine Comedy" superior to all the epic of Virgil or Milton, not excepting "Iliad or "Iliad."

"Hwntwys" is the name applied to the inhabitants of the south of Wales by the men of the north. The northmen have a strong dislike for the "Hwntwys," and hardy underdons.

There are not less than 3,000 white optioners in Scotland. Many jobs in the north having been closed, "optioners get their own apparatus, and "hit the p'p" in their own rooms.

The Paris Vandeuille Theatre has just adopted a very clever invention, by means of which each seat can at once folded up into the thickness of three inches, rest for the arm and all; likewise a hat stand and a cane stand.

The property of France, stored in the Garde-Meuble in Paris, is said to have a value of round 30,000,000 francs. It consists chiefly of furniture, glass, and china, and contains among other pieces of historical value the bed and writing desk of Louis XIV.

In Schenectady, N. Y., there are two women twins 94 years of age. Both are described as well preserved, active and in full possession of their mental faculties. Each was the mother of seven children, the twin family being alive, "one at the age of 65, the other 68 years."

Sokkabia Swassia is said to be the richest Indian in Maine. He is the handomest man in the Island of Oldtown, and one of the most intelligent. He is a lineal descendant of the Baron de Castine. There are many educated Indians on that island, and they live very like their white neighbors.

There is no probability of doubt that Ludwig II., King of Bavaria, is probably mad. The fact will soon be formally recognized by the Bavarian Landtag by voting to pay the enormous debts of the King under the State's guarantee, on the condition that the Landtag shall hereafter have absolute control over the finances of the royal household.

In 1863 the Rev. Newton Chance of Texas killed an editor in Sherman, and moved to Mississippi. At that time he was a lawyer, but, becoming converted, he entered the ministry. Recently he returned to Texas, and while on a visit to Sherman was arrested for the murder committed twenty-two years ago.

Some thing may now be done to make potato bugs less destructive; another season by destroying the old beetles which emerge from the ground after frost has destroyed the vine. It is a reasonable theory that these beetles require one full meal before retiring to winter quarters. At all events, the male beetles have been observed to leave the vine by accident or otherwise.

Advantage may be taken of this to poison the beetles by sprinkling a few with water containing Paris green and leaving them where the bugs can get at them. This is, in fact, the only time at which it is possible to do this, as the beetles are hibernating.

In the warm weather of summer they are too busily engaged in propagating to eat.

Tomato vines whose fruit is well along toward maturity will sometimes ripen a good portion of it after being pulled up and hung in a warm dry place. Do this before the vines are cut down.

In the course of a recent address on grain, Mr. J. R. Alcott said: "A town flock of sheep, with a shepherd and his boy, would be a grand thing to keep down brush and weeds along our highways, and would bring in native grasses that would be a real ornament to every country roadside."

In France some experiments have recently been made in supplying cows with cold and warm water to test the effect on them as milk givers. The food given was the same in both cases, but it was found that those ewes with water heated to 113° produced one third more milk than those given cold water.

Few farmers would think of turning stock on their timothy meadows in the Spring. But they should remember that it destroys a great deal of the grass when protection is most needed.

Every pound of food stolen from a timothy or clover meadow is offset by the loss in next season's hay crop besides the chance it gives to the weeds to fill vacances where the grass is killed.

The experience of last year and of the Spring of 1882 in some quarters ought to be a sufficient warning to growers of grapes that they must be more meticulous without all the vicissitudes of our climate without protection. By all means lay them down before Winter sets in and give them at least a slight covering. Nothing is so good for this purpose as old sods turned root upward. Nothing is so bad as having them on the trellis, for they may be taken down some time for trimming and now is the time for that operation.

Now the Salmon Jumps.

Professor A. Landmark, chief director of the Norwegian Fisheries, has published some interesting particulars of his studies of the salmon, and how it jumps waterfalls. He is of opinion that the jumping is as much on the height of the fall as on the currents below it. If there be a deep pool right under the fall, where the water is comparatively quiet a salmon may jump six feet perpendicular, but if the jumps are rare, and he can only start with certainty that it has taken place at the Hellefoss in the Drams River, at Haugstrand, where two great masses of rock stand across the river in the shape of the habits of the salmon, so that exact measurements cannot be affected.

The height of the water in the river, of course, varies, but it is as a rule, when the fish are running up stream, sixteen feet below the fall. The salmon jump between two or three and one half feet, and the professor states that he has seen salmon jump from the river below across both masts. As another example of high jumping, he mentions some instances of Carratun water-

A HISTORIC SPOT.

A Visit to Stony Creek Battlefield, N.Y.

BY JOHN PEARD, MONTREAL.

Forty years have come and gone since our first visit to Stony Creek. This place is seven miles distant from Hamilton and is celebrated in Canadian story as being the scene of a night surprise one of the most glorious achievements of the war of 1812, of which the men of the Niagara District and the descendants of the OLD YORK MILITIA naturally pride themselves as having had relatives representing nearly every old soldier of LINCOLN and YORK then serving in the little British force on the Niagara frontier.

There were two surprises, turning points, at most critical periods of the war, by which the advance of the Americans was arrested. The first occurred at Stony Creek on the early morning of Sunday, the 6th of June, 1813, and resulted in checking the advance of General Dearborn, then in full career with the British force under General Vincent, in his retreat from Fort George.

The second was that of Chateauguay on the 26th of October, 1813, by which De Salaberry and his small force of Canadians defeated and turned the advance of the Americans on Montreal into a disastrous retreat.

The people of Upper Canada claim Stony Creek, and justly so, as their own. The militia of Lower Canada, De Salaberry and his little band of soldiers, have the undying admiration of the Chateauguay affair.

Supported, however, on the last day, by the timely arrival of RED GEORGE, Colonel George Macdonald, of the Royal Canadian Regiment, and his hundred Canadian troops, General Dearborn was beaten at Stony Creek. In a future article we shall be able to furnish our readers with the march of the 1000 Macdonald men from Kingston to the battle field of Chateauguay.

Stony Creek in itself was but a small affair, but it is in so far important to the British forces, but, in its results, it proved the most important action of the whole war, by checking the advance of a comparatively powerful army, flushed with recent success, and turning that advance into a disastrous one.

To make this article interesting it is necessary to give a short account of the positions, relative forces and the various movements of the two armies on the Niagara frontier, from the time of the arrival of General Dearborn to the retreat of Fort George and the retreat of the British force to Burlington Heights, now the city of Hamilton.

General Vincent had command of the British forces on the Niagara frontier, and numbered about 1,800 men and 500 militia, 1000 regulars, 500 sailors, according from Fort Erie opposite Buffalo down to Lake Ontario, with headquarters at Fort George.

During the winter of 1813 the Americans had made great preparations to strike a decided blow for the reduction of Upper Canada. Their plans were bold and thorough, and the audacity of their generals.

The reader will bear in mind that at that time (1813) Great Britain was engaged in war all over the world, in Europe, Asia, Africa and America, and could spare but a few regulars for Canada.

General Vincent and the Americans in the control of Lake Ontario, having, comparatively, a powerful fleet under Commodore Chauncy.

The first move was an attack on York (Toronto) on the 27th of April, 1813. The place being ill-prepared for defense was easily taken, and the regulars of the British army were flushed with victory, blamed at the time, saving his regulars, then few, leaving the Americans master of the place, which they held for five days and then sailed for the reduction of Fort George at the mouth of the Niagara.

The attack on Fort George was commenced on the morning of the 27th of May, 1813. The Americans, hearing their shipping, had an army of nearly 6000 men of all ranks. The British force at Fort George, all told, was about 1000 men. Criticizing it at the present day it would be well to remember that it was a small force of regulars, and the rest were militia, and that the British force at Fort George, which had been so easily taken, had been reduced to a mere skeleton.

After a spirited defense of some four hours, the British lost a large number having amounted to over four hundred men, between killed, wounded and missing. General Vincent, to prevent being surrounded and cut off, decided on a retreat to the head of the Lake, and fell back across the country in a line parallel to the shore, up the hill, and retreated on the 28th to have resisted the American attack, by which hundreds of his best soldiers were sacrificed in a needless defense.

It was nearly with the "silence of death" that the children had with their brave defenders, among whom were their husbands, their fathers, their brothers, but by the time of retreat, when the British had been let out to see that night on Burlington Heights. Their resolve was: "to do or die." And before they had got to the next morning they had have in the enemy's camp, as we shall relate in our next article.

Society Adventurers.

Mr. E. C. Grenville Murray says, in his "Letters to the Lens," that "the circle of London is the most adventurous of both countries who live by prying upon people as a profession." This is not true of London society only, but these social adventurers are to be found in every part of the world under the sun. The large numbers of Canadian society people, however, have themselves to thank for becoming the victims of these adventurous people.

These are descendants of obscure families and having acquired wealth, are desirous of "cutting a dash," as the phrase is. And what is so great a halo to them is that they are the sons of noblemen; and it is not till the discovery is made that the son's title is a bogus one, and that the noble's name is a mere name of rank, that they are exposed.

LOCAL ITEMS.

The boyars already for Hallowe'en. The Chief impounded a few more cows last week.

The Dramatic Society are reorganizing for the winter's work.

There has been a big rush to Dalton's furniture ware-rooms during the past week.

Candidates for municipal honours are already on the still hunt.

A few holes are still to be seen in the boardwalks.

The festive fly is becoming week and for looking and will soon leave us.

The front gate business is on its last pins.

Advertising, when judiciously done, is the best business reviver, for it assures trade.

Thanksgiving Day originally fixed for Saturday, Nov. 7th, has in deference to public opinion been changed to Thursday, Nov. 12th.

George Crysler, who has a continual feud with the saws in the shingle mill, had his fingers severely cut again the other day. Better give up the useless struggle.

It is impossible for an advertiser to show his stock upon paper, but the newspaper helps very much to keep you posted on its general character.

Mrs. Crook and D. Goodmury, heavy weight athletes, competed the other day in a wrestling match for the championship of the west ward. The former still wears the medal.

It would be most desirable if the Indian Council could see its way clear to extend the boundaries of the western limits of the village as far at least as Christ Church on the Reserve.

Mr. Bell of the Bowen farm, has removed an immense number of large boulders from that property, and has also been improving it by ditching operations.

Mr. T. N. Carter is holding a great sale of boots and shoes this week as it is the season to get them. The hardware department of his business by New Year's A rare opportunity is thus afforded for splendid bargains. See adt.

The Board of Health is enforcing the Vaccination Act. All parties not vaccinated by Nov. 4th will be fined. There is no alternative but to pay the fine in Moncton and the disease has appeared in many other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. & Mrs. John Smith, of Powles Hill, presented Rural Dean Baker with a very nice set of cups and saucers and some parlor ornaments, and Mr. Jesse Martin also kindly presented him with some handsome parting gifts.

Over the people of Deseronto erected their new town hall and market buildings;

the two governments will vie with each other in making the necessary appropriations for the bridges over the bay.

LARGE catches of white fish have been made during the past few weeks and the market has been tolerably well supplied. It is believed that the catch of white fish in the bay has been caused by the action of overexposure Wilkins in causing the removal of nets from the Upper Gap.

It is reported that the congregation will erect a brick parsonage on the Reserve next year. The present building is old and uncomfortable. There is no doubt that the people of the Reserve will contribute to the cost into this new undertaking as well as the much needed renovation of Christ Church.

Mr. Hopkins, of Osgowo, with a number of men is rapidly transforming Central Park into a handsome pleasure ground. Walks have been laid out and the fence will be removed, trees planted and everything will be done to make it a beautiful resort.

The quantity of barley brought into Deseronto is comparatively small. Farmers say that more competition is wanted and it is hoped that more buyers will establish agencies here. Some suggest the formation of a local syndicate for that purpose. We refer to the matter as affording much food for thought.

Mr. Charles Dryden is busy at present making some ditches along the Boundary road which will serve the double purpose of drainage and the graveling of the same.

The graveling of the Boundary road is a matter which should be continually pressed on the township and county councils. Farmers are anxious for the early completion of that desirable work.

AN ACT OF VENTURE is a department of their profession which it seems to be to him utterly neglected. Churches, especially give evidence of this fact, close and polluted atmospheres being only too common in such edifices. No wonder the people sigh for better surroundings or start off to the country for pure oxygen. This will remove any uneasiness of Christians arise and suspend as architect or two from a church spire.

The members of Prince Albert, L.O.L. No. 1375 will attend divine service in St. Mark's Church, Deseronto, on Nov. 5th, at 7:30 o'clock. All members of the Order and citizens generally are invited to be present on the occasion. Services will be conducted by the Rector assisted by the Rev. Mr. George Gordon of Tyendinaga. Collection will be in aid of the Building Fund of St. Mark's Church.

THE DESERONTO TRIBUNE has commenced the advocacy of bridges connecting Fredrickburgh and Edward's Landing, Deseronto. During four months a year ago we were not required for communication between those points, and during the balance of the year an efficient ferry boat would accommodate all the traffic. Bridges are unnecessary, are too expensive and would prove a serious bar to navigation.—Beaver, Napanee.

Full range of Dolman and Mantle Ornaments just opened at The Big Store.

Visiting and mourning cards neatly printed at THE TRIBUNE office.

Large flights of wild geese have been observed this week passing south to milder climates.

The Weekly Globe and Mail until Jan. 1st, 1887 for $1.00. Subscriptions received at THE TRIBUNE office.

The Reliance reared port on Wednesday night having made the round trip to Osgowo and discharged a cargo of nearly 200,000 ft. of lumber in 22 hours and 35 minutes.

Hanlan was defeated in the recent race with Teemer. After being completely out-rowed he fell out of his boat. Many say the oars were not long enough, and race not by any means improbable. Professional oarsmen are notoriously corrupt.

Mr. Wm. Powles has purchased the new steam ferry boat from Mr. Edward Walsh and it will be run on the Victoria Ferry, near the Bay. The new boat is said to stand the heavy seas very well, and its new owner will make some changes to increase its speed.

THE DESERONTO TRIBUNE is agitating the question of a bridge to connect the village with Edward's Landing and Fredrickburgh. It is of the opinion that Dominion and Provincial aid could be obtained, Deseronto will next want the government to build its plankwalks.—Napanee Express.

The Oswego Advertiser states that Mr. G. E. Ross, a resident of Deseronto, has accepted the position of stenographer in the office of a law firm in New Hampshire. We congratulate our young friend on this reward for his industry and perseverance.

With a market and mechanics institute established, a bank will not be long away as built, the board of health would be in a position to remane these bridges over the bay to encourage the TRIBUNE to wend its way with the Sir John and other good men to that higher sphere.

Young men have sensibly concluded that it is more profitable to spend a dollar for admission to the Mechanic's Institute than invest it in a hand-cam or oyster knife. Boys who by the long run will leave home, their lunch and carry some young farmer of Tyendinaga with broad acres a man a big bank account.

It is apparent that while every day is market day in Deseronto, Tuesday and Saturday will be the chief market days of the week. The attendance has been remarkably good so far and in excess of all anticipations. Residents are pleased and very many farmers have called at this office to express their satisfaction. The price much higher here than in other towns of the district, but as greater numbers of farmers come in things will soon reach their level. While paying big prices residents of Deseronto all concur that the produce they now purchase is far superior in quality to what they ever got. The market is well supplied with meat, vegetables, fruit, &c. The platform is not wide enough for the crowds who frequent the market and more accommodations will be required. New market buildings will solve that problem.

The only part of the new market by-law about which we have heard serious complaints is that relating to the sale of meat. Farmers and many residents of the village complain that the butcher's arrangement with the butchers have altogether too much of a monopoly, and this account for the extremely high prices which people pay here as compared with other towns. Butchers now are allowed to peddle and cut their meat in any quantity they please, and the old fashioned food market is to be allowed to sell only by the quarter. The latter did not object to that part, but they claim that stalls should be erected in the market for the butchers, who should be confined to them, and that the meat there should be delivered in airtight barrels. Until such stalls are erected, farmers should be permitted they claim, to cut their meat on the market. Such are the complaints of many, and it was well for the market committee to enquire into them and endeavor to remove them as they consider necessary.

THE FAMOUS case, Dog vs. Pant's came off at Shannonville on Tuesday. It had for weeks ended with the Riel case absorbed public attention, but the court was now again very packed with an expectant audience.

It seems that at the Oldfield's Piehouse last summer a dog owned by Mr. Gordon attacked Mr. Valence and tore his canine. This made Valence sue for damages, and he did so. The dog was a Great Dane, and he demands damages. Hence the trial was adjourned.

THE Chemical Works advertises for bone skeletons of poets are of any use they are welcome to those in the cellar of this office.

THE directors of the Mechanics Institute are making every great encouragement, a long list of intelligent mechanics and other residents being already secured.

Mr. E. W. Rathbun on his late trip through Hungerford had the misfortune to stumble and seriously sprain his ankle. He is now recovering.

COMPLAINTS are numerous along the rowdy conduct of a number of boys who frequent Thomas-st east of the Methodist Church. They carry off gates, break down fences, and generally annoy the residents in that locality. Some of them go as far as to place a piece of lighted pitch in the pitchforks.

AN ACCOMMODATING BAND.

To the Editor of THE TRIBUNE.

DESERONTO, ONTARIO, OCT. 29th, 1885.

Sir.—I think a leaden advertisement is necessary why there was no music at the Carnival on Thursday night.

On Monday I went over to the Band room and asked Mr. Mallory, the leader, if it were possible to have a band play at the Ballroom, of say 5 or 6 pieces for that evening.

He said that the band room was not large enough to accommodate a band of 5 or 6 pieces as for the whole Band.
